

HISTORY OF MEDICINE 507
HEALTH, DISEASE AND HEALING I
Fall, 2003

Instructor: Tom Broman 263-1562
Dept. of History of Science thbroman@wisc.edu
7133 Social Science Office hours: 10:00 – 12:00 Tuesdays

History of Medicine 507 offers a comprehensive survey of the social, intellectual and institutional developments in health care between 400 b.c. and 1700. In any course covering that much ground, one cannot hope to give equal attention to all aspects of the subject, so I have concentrated on those topics where there seems to be the most abundant and accessible historical literature. As an experiment this year, I decided to organize the course in what is called by the Timetable people “lecture-lab format,” which means that we meet for one hour lecture each week and then two hours of the “lab” portion of the course. Each Wednesday-Monday “pair” works as a unit. The lecture on Wednesday will serve as something of an oral reading guide for the following Monday’s seminar meeting.

There are three books that will be used in this course, which are available for purchase at the Underground Textbook Exchange on State Street:

Carlo M. Cipolla, Faith, reason and the Plague in Seventeenth-Century Tuscany
Mary Lindemann, Medicine and Society in Early Modern Europe
Nancy G. Siraisi, Medieval and Early Renaissance Medicine

There is also a required course reader, which costs $27.00, available in the History of Science office, 7143 Social Science.

Course requirements & grading

Let there be no mistake: This is primarily a seminar-type course. The reading load is heavy – sometimes over 100 pages per week, although I have tried to make it taper off toward the end of the semester – and you will be expected to come to class on Mondays having done the reading and prepared to talk about it. As you will see below, attendance and participation carry a considerable weight in your final grade, and absences for any reason other than illness or family emergency will count against your participation grade. Your participation grade begins at a “F” and will go up or down from there.

Students taking the course for 4 credits will do an 8 to 10–page research paper on a topic worked out in consultation with me. Students taking the course for 3 credits may, at that choice, do a research paper too, as a substitute for one of the three required take-home essays, which will be distributed after each third of the course. These essays will be responses to questions handed out the previous week in class, and will be based on assigned readings and lectures. Students who elect to do the research paper will write two of those three essays (it will be the student’s choice about which one not to do), and the balance in grading will be shifted somewhat toward greater weighting of the research paper.

At the very latest, all students who want to do a research paper must have informed me of the choice by the time the first essay questions are distributed on Wednesday, October 2. After that date, no one may choose to do the research paper option.

Grading for the option without a research paper will be:
25% attendance and participation
25% for each of the three essays

Grading for the option with a research paper will be:
25% for attendance and participation
20% for each of the two essays
35% for the research paper

Graduate students will be expected to write a substantial research paper (approx. 15–18 pages) which will be due the week of Thanksgiving, when the undergrad research papers are due.

<sup>1</sup>Along with several other readings in the packet, this is a facing-page translation, with the original Greek text on the left and the equivalent passages translated into English on the right. You have been given the first two pages, so that you can get an idea of what the text looks like and how it is structured. But after the first page, the packet contains only the translation. That is why page numbering proceeds with alternate pages.
